While there is a large body of scholarship on written names within onomastic and linguistic studies, the characteristics specific to the written form have only rarely been the analytical focus. Extant onomastic research has mainly been interested in graphemic form. Recently emerging fields outside onomastics, such as linguistic landscape studies, approach written names from a sociolinguistic perspective, albeit without a specific interest in names. With a distinct focus on names in writing, this volume brings together scholarship from different fields within both traditional name studies and other disciplines to approach the subject from various angles. By reflecting on the significance of writing in the study of names, this volume covers a wide range of topics in the hope of stimulating further research within the area.
